Woodstock Church, drawn by Iain Macnab
Printed by hand at the Samson Press, Woodstock

Dear Aunt Evie,

Your great-great-grandfather, John Churchill, Mayor of Woodstock, Oxford, was the contractor who built the tower on this church at Woodstock in 1784, for which he collected £.850, when money was MONEY. The tower is now in a parlous state, and there is an appeal out for funds to repair the work of your G.G. grandfather. However, 1784 is a long time ago, eh? Before Australia was first settled in! So it was not a bad job of work I suppose after all that time. This is not a true picture of the church; it is drawn by some local artist, painted also locally, both far from class work.
