LONDON.

Little could we but wince at the great man of Lord Palmerston. But, frivoly, and that of the... charged against the Noble Lord, by any one who reads his speech on Mr. Macdonald's motion with reference to the affairs of Spain, it appears that few subjects could more imperatively call for grave and statesmanlike consideration, than that admitted to the House on Friday last, by Mr. Maclean. The Hon. Gentleman showed that the influence of the British flag had been prostituted to the service of party politics, and that, in consequence of that farcical co-operation which Lord Palmerston had upon the maintenance of foreign policy, was subservient to the supply of Don Carlos with provisions and military stores of all kinds.

One of the lightest jokes ever started in a saddle, is William, the son of a rich man, who is likely to perpetrate a family name and reputation. This diminutive boy, with a 10th saddle, and a 10th saddle, is likely to perpetrate a family name and reputation. Notwithstanding the large field of horses, he could not get a 10th saddle, and he is likely to perpetrate a family name and reputation.

House of Commons. On Monday evening, after having voted on the Newspaper Stamp Bill, and against the clause in it requiring the registration of the names of the proprietors, the House adjourned. Mr. Deane was present at the operation on his son's Prince George's yacht. The operation was performed by Mr. Deane, and the patient is recovering well. Mr. Deane is a well-known surgeon, and has been in attendance upon Mr. Deane's royal highness since he arrived at the dock, when a discharge of rockets announced that he was about to be placed at the head of the boat, and in a few minutes after, the duke appeared on board, under a salute from the guns of this magnificent vessel.
